

Communicating Clear Instructions

Over the past few months, we have all learned how to do lots of new things.

This may be things you've had to learn to access your school work online, or it may have been a new skill you have learned to help around the house! Maybe you have learnt a completely new skill by taking up a new hobby or interest... What you have learned could be anything, from how to use Zoom, how to cook a new meal for your family, or how to fix something.

Today, we would like you to think about something you have learned to do during lockdown and test your communication skills by explaining how to do this to other people. Not only will this perhaps others to learn something new, but will also help to demonstrate your own understanding.

So for today's task, can you produce a list of really comprehensive instructions to help explain to someone else how to complete the same task?

Try to use photos and images to help you communicate your instructions in an even clearer way.

We can't wait to see what new skills you have gained during lockdown, and hopefully use your instructions to try and develop some new skills ourselves!

As always, make sure you share your work with us by posting online and tagging us in @pieuksocial.
